

Crystal Basin Recreation Area

Powering forward.
Together.

treadlightly!

During your visit to the Crystal Basin, please join us and the Forest Service in our commitment to protect the environment. Please respect the natural inhabitants of the forest, the rights of those you meet along the way and those who follow you.

Welcome to the Crystal Basin Recreation Area of the Eldorado National Forest, spanning 85,000 acres of pine and fir forests along the western slopes of the Sierra Nevada. Capped by the majestic, granite peaks of the Crystal Range and traversed by lakes, reservoirs and streams, the Crystal Basin’s four seasons and varied terrain offer a diverse range of rugged outdoor adventure.

History

The Crystal Basin was once the home of the Miwok, Washoe and Maidu people. In the 1800s, ranch settlers grazed dairy cattle on the high mountain meadows now covered by reservoirs. In the early 1900s, the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) Forest Service opened the Crystal Basin to the public.

In 1957, Sacramento Municipal Utility District (SMUD) began construction of the Upper American River Project (UARP), a series of hydroelectric power plants in the Crystal Basin. Today, the UARP is capable of producing 1.8 billion kilowatt-hours of clean, affordable electricity — enough energy to power about 200,000 homes a year in Sacramento.

As part of the UARP, we created a network of beautiful mountain reservoirs and built a variety of recreational facilities around the reservoirs. Working together, SMUD and the Forest Service continue to provide land and water-based recreation opportunities for all visitors to enjoy.

Camping

Over 700 developed campsites are available in the Crystal Basin. Most require fees and/or reservations and have a fire ring with a grate, table and parking spur. Campgrounds have bear proof storage and trash containers, toilets and many provide piped-in water. Most sites accommodate recreational vehicles (no hookups). The maximum stay is 14 days.

Most areas of the National Forest allow camping in an undeveloped setting. When you pick your spot, make sure it's at least 100 feet away from streams and lakes, to protect streamside vegetation and prevent pollution.

Fishing

Anglers can cast for kokanee salmon, small mouth bass, mackinaw or rainbow trout at Union Valley Reservoir. SMUD and the California Department of Fish and Wildlife stock rainbow trout throughout the summer in Ice House, Union Valley and the Loon Lake Reservoir. For fishing enthusiasts eager to reel in a wild brown trout, try your luck at Gerle Creek.

Bicycling

The Crystal Basin has trails for both road cyclists and mountain bikers to enjoy. For families with children and cyclists who prefer a relaxed ride on pavement, Union Valley Reservoir has a paved 12.5 mile bike trail that winds along the edge of the lake. Mountain bikers can enjoy a 3.1 mile stretch of single track trail along the Ice House campgrounds.

Horseback riding

Equestrian campgrounds are available at Loon Lake Reservoir, Wrights Lake and Tells Creek with access to scenic riding trails. The individual sites at Loon Lake Reservoir have hitching posts and pull-through parking to conveniently accommodate horse trailers.

Boating

Recreational boating is a favorite pastime on the clear mountain lakes of the Crystal Basin. Ice House, Union Valley and Loon Lake Reservoir have paved boat ramps and are large enough to accommodate motorboats and water sports.

Be aware of the spread of invasive mussels and remember to clean, drain and dry before and after launching into new waters.

Hiking

The Crystal Basin provides a gateway to Desolation Wilderness, offering access to 117 miles of hiking trails across the Sierra Nevada. Many of the trails located within the Crystal Basin offer easy to moderate day hikes. For an easy, educational hike, try the accessible Gerle Creek Summer Harvest Trail and learn how Native Americans utilized the resources available from the forest.

Accessible

Many of the developed areas throughout the Crystal Basin are accessible for people with disabilities. The Crystal Basin Information Station, fishing pier and trails at Gerle Creek, many of the campsites, parking areas and the paved boat ramps at the reservoirs accommodate wheelchairs.

Snow skiing

Cross-country skiers can traverse miles of exquisite, pristine ski trails near Loon Lake Reservoir, the highest elevation reservoir in the Crystal Basin. The ratings for the ungroomed trails range from “Easiest” to “Most Difficult.” Trail maps are available from the Forest Service. Keep safety in mind, know your limitations and stay within your difficulty level.

Off-Highway Vehicle (OHV)

For those who prefer 4-wheels, the Crystal Basin is home to one of the most famous OHV trails, the Rubicon Jeep Trail. Another popular trail is the Barrett Jeep Trail near Wrights Lake. Please check the latest Motor Vehicle Use Map (MVUM) and only travel on designated roads and motorized trails.

Robbs Hut

Robbs Hut is a popular mountain bunkhouse located on a 6,700 foot peak overlooking the Crystal Basin. It's open year-round, and features a cook stove, outdoor barbeque and sleeping accommodations for six. Overnight reservations required.

Loon Lake Chalet

Skiers, hikers and mountain bikers can take refuge at the Loon Lake Chalet year-round. It offers a large warming room, a small kitchen and sleeping accommodations for up to 20 people. Overnight reservations required. Reopening date to be determined.

Big Hill

For a panoramic view of the captivating scenery of the Crystal Basin, visit Big Hill Vista and Lookout. It offers views of the Crystal Range and west to Sacramento and Mount Diablo.
